

ABSTRACT

A bag wall includes side walls in which bands of material are divided into bag loops. Dividers are secured across these bag loops utilizing clips which extend along one side over the bag loop and on the other side over a fixing loop of the divider. Thus, the fixing loops are held in robust association with the bag loops in order to provide appropriate division of an interior space of the bag. Similar clips can be utilized with fixing loops in order to secure bridge dividers or a compartment within the space.